

Paul Pilkonis, PhD's primary commitment has been to clinical research, including basic behavioral research on psychopathology, with a focus on the description, assessment, and longitudinal course of personality disorders; research on psychosocial treatments for affective and personality disorders; and research on the application of new quantitative techniques to problems of measurement and modeling in psychopathology. He is the Principal Investigator at the Pittsburgh site for the NIH Roadmap initiative, "Patient-Reported Outcomes Measurement Information System (PROMIS, U01 AR52155), with a focus on the development of item banks in the domains of emotional distress and sleep/wake functioning.